

To the FCC: Once again, the Home Depot-Walmart-and such Conglomerates, threaten the choices a consumer can make. Here comes new competition, that does a much better job, and the incumbents go crying to the Federal Government. Competition is healthy. Let's keep that way. I pay for this service and deem it a much better value than free radio. The free enterprise market should be allowed to exist without Federal intervention on the part of special interests groups, where healthy competition is the theme. This is no different than buying cable or satellite tv, who by the way also provide the traffic and weather information. Why would you single out satellite radio? Leave it alone. If you agree with free radio on this topic, next they will be asking you to prevent music from being broadcast. You have already given away the consumers' right in regards to free space. In the past, the FCC has made behind closed door decisions not in the best interests of the public. Let's hope this does not continue.
